

John Loughran

John offers extensive experience in urban design, planning and architecture, which he applies to transit-oriented development (TOD) and redevelopment projects. John has a passion for linking placemaking, society and economics to leverage transportation and infrastructure investments that build communities. He is passionate about design, but also understands city building is shaped by other external forces that need to be in place for cities to thrive and be equitable places where people want to be. With over 30 years' experience as an architect and urban designer, John has led the preparation of a wide range of large-scale TOD studies, urban design plans, and development plans and entitlements for large mixed-use developments. Project experience includes design guidelines for Hudson Yards in New York City, visioning for the LA River and Guidelines for Equitable Transit Oriented Development in Raleigh.

John holds a master's in business administration from Baruch College and Bachelor of Science degree in architecture from the Catholic University of America.
